"What is it that gives me hope? Looking at the stars always makes me dream."

Vincent van Gogh

I would like for you to understand Van Gogh in a new way - a different way - and be open to hearing some things that you may never have heard about him before.

We know the most about Vincent van Gogh from his own hand, his own words assembled in three volumes of 1800 pages of letters, mostly to his brother Theo, expressing his thoughts, his creative process, his struggles, his joys, his sorrows. Why then is he so misunderstood, so misrepresented? Let me, through his words and my own research into his life and letters, and a lifetime of painting at the very sites where he labored in front of his easel, try to break the myths about his life.
